

constitutional heterogeneity (of polymers)

The variation in constitution from molecule to molecule in polymers with molecules uniform with respect to elemental composition.

An example is a polymer composed of linear and branched molecules; another example is a statistical copolymer comprising two isomeric constitutional units.

P.B. 52