

low energy electron diffraction (LEED)

Any technique which measures the angular intensity distribution of electrons reflected from a crystalline surface under bombardment with low energy electrons ($E_0 < 500$ eV) in larger angles of incidence. The diffraction pattern also provides very surface sensitive information on the atomic arrangement of the top layers of a solid.

1983, 55, 2025